My prompt: Write a 5-minute stand-up comedy routine in English that uses observational humor about modern technology and daily life.

Make it funny, smart, and relatable — with a tone that's a little sarcastic but still warm. Include jokes about smartphones, smartwatches, Zoom calls, dating apps, and everyday frustrations with gadgets.

Structure it like a real stand-up set: an opening, a middle with at least 2 topic transitions, and a strong closing.

Make sure there are punchlines, callbacks, and a consistent comedic voice throughout. Aim for a pace that would match a 5-minute live performance.

Great! Let's craft your 5-minute stand-up comedy set. I'll create one that's observational, relatable, and with a touch of sarcasm. Here's a theme to start with:

Title: "Modern Life is a Software Update"

[Opening - 0:00-1:00]

Hi everyone!

So glad to be here.

I almost didn't make it because my phone needed a "critical software update" just as I booked

Apparently, my phone is more dramatic than I am—it was like, "I will now shut down and restart your life. Goodbye."

Have you noticed how every gadget in our lives now thinks it's your life coach? Like my smartwatch told me to "breathe" today.

I was like, "Buddy, if I forget that, I have bigger problems than your battery life."

[Middle -1:00-3:00]

We're living in a world where even fridges are smart now.

My fridge told me I was low on milk and then added it to an online shopping cart. I didn't even ask.

Next thing you know, the fridge will judge me:

"Another tub of ice cream, Raj? Are we okay emotionally?"

Let's talk passwords.

Every site now needs a capital letter, a symbol, a number, a blood sample, and the tears of a

And then they say, "This password is too weak."

Too weak?? It's stronger than my will to live after Zoom calls.

[Middle -3:00-4:30]

Speaking of Zoom, you ever talk for 5 minutes straight on mute? That's modern heartbreak.

You pour your soul out in a meeting and someone goes, "Hey, you're on mute." It's like confessing your love to someone and realizing they had AirPods in.

Dating apps. Let's not even go there. It's like online shopping, except everything in your cart ghosts you.

My last match said, "Looking for someone who's emotionally available." So I replied, "Same. Let me know if you find someone."

[Closing - 4:30-5:00]

Life is weird.

Your microwave judges your leftovers.

Your fitness band knows you better than your therapist.

And your phone is the only thing that dies more often than your motivation.

But hey, we're all doing our best.

And if we can survive software updates, Zoom fails, and 47 passwords—We can survive anything.

Thank you and remember to breathe! Unless your smartwatch already told you.
